In the News Scammers are cropping up on Facebook, with a recent report claiming that scammers are trying to lure in victims by promising money. The scammers want to make a quick dollar, usually by luring in elderly people on Facebook Messenger, a service which is free to use for users. The scammers claim that they will be sending millions of dollars or pounds to victims of Hurricane Harvey in Texas, and to the families of first responders killed during hurricane Irma in Florida. People have learned over the years to be careful when they're on the Internet. It's a mistake that can result in people losing money, details on their accounts, access to family, or even being the victims of malicious cyber-attacks. Social media sites have become regular targets for cybercriminals looking to hijack, defraud, and harm people. Elderly people are often targeted by a scammer to secretly convert their money for a living. The scammers, known as "money mules" claim that they can deposit money for people and hide the identity of the true owner. It's another relatively simple and straightforward scam that can be hard to detect. It may come as a surprise to some, but people get paid for some of their work online and even get paid for stuff they didn't do. These online "work-from-home" jobs are actually scams designed to take your money for a living. Frauds like these are very common and you may not even know how you are being cheated. They usually promise you the chance to make thousands of dollars by working from home. Not all scams are created equal. Scammers will often use different methods and tricks to offer their services. You should know what to look for. This guide will help you figure out if the job is for real or not, and what to watch for when considering these kinds of services. Scammers will often tell you that you need to pay for a "pre-registration" or "registration fee" for the service. Some of the most common scams ask for an up-front payment before they give you access to the details of your portfolio. These are usually the worst kind of scams. Make sure to never pay for a "pre-registration" or "registration fee." There is no such thing. You should also never pay for "free work" because you will

The Gradient Tool can create gradients, either from the actual gradient from the image itself or a predefined gradient Using the Blend Modes provides you a way to combine the opacity of one color with another color. The Transform tool lets you modify the size, rotation, scale and skew of an image #1 Position the image in the center of the page horizontally and vertically. #2 Create a rectangular marquee around the outside edge of the image. #3 Select the Rectangular Marquee tool from the Tools panel. #4 Click on the center of the page and drag outward and inward in uniform increments. #5 The area of the page that is actually covered by the image is the area that the marquee will select and cut. #6 Click OK. Note: The size of the marquee will be the largest amount of space that is between your current selection and the corners. If you have the selection set to the original size of the image, it will be correct. If you copied the image, it will give you a new layer to work on. If you saved the image as a JPEG, it will be working on the original layer that contains the image data. You should see the yellow status bar at the bottom of the workspace indicating that Photoshop is in Magnification mode. Ok, now we will create a selection from the outside edge of the image that we just selected. Select the Clipping Mask (not shown) and with the Rectangular Marquee tool, make a selection. Have you ever tried to use the Select & Color Range tool to do a type of selection on an image? The Select & Color Range tool will help you with that. Note: You will still need to select the shape and make a selection from the inner edge to the outer edge. Step 3: Change the color of the selection to red and with the selection still active, press the key combination below to change the selection color. This key combination will let you change the color of the selection and still keep the current selection. See the below instruction if you do not know how to change the color of the selection.
