In the summer of 2012, I made an appearance at the Birmingham Howl festival and it was pretty exciting. There were thousands of people, drinking and dancing and breaking into a raggle-taggle camp and thousands of acres of derelict woodland and a 30ft wall... We've all been there - the big, hairy wall of a foreign country for days or weeks - living on chicken and water for fear that a little thrill is going to burst out of us before we get in.

It's not a pretty experience. But when you find out the walls are pretty interesting, well then, that's when things get exciting. You can see my full report on the festival in the Edinburgh Evening News - cut the c**p about the weather out and take the rest! It's been all change this week as Guy Spence returns to tell you the latest from the festival and the magicians are back too, so fire up that laptop and don your short-pants! (And your long-johns.) Abode Of Peace, Saturday: the opening night of the festival is always a big do with lots of open-air bars and food stalls with cheap beer and party rings on every corner. This year there'll be everyone from a full cast of Robert Wilson's new opera to a splendid work about Jamaica, a piece about Norwich and an Arctic wonderland. Although we're not able to see it on opening night, the festival's new show with the Tyneside sound artist Professor Elemental will be playing over the weekend. Second Floor, Sunday: the group of people who run the festival, the Edinburgh International Festival Office, have got something big planned for Sunday night and 3da54e8ca3
