In the "1C:Enterprise 8" mode you can enter from the menu "Enterprise-Mode", but it does not have such objects as documents and directories. However, in 1C:Enterprise 8 mode, you can work in Configurator mode. Using the Configurator, you can create new objects, or populate existing ones. To perform these operations, you can use the Configurator. To do this, switch to the "Configurator" mode from the "Enterprise" menu, then open the "Main menu", the "Configuration" item. In the Configurator window that appears, click on "Open Configuration". In the appeared window choose the configuration file for opening. Choose the file with extension *.cf. By default, when you open a configuration file, it opens in the same form as the original configuration file. It is very convenient, if you plan to use this configuration file for further work. To open a configuration file in a different form, select "Change Configuration" in the "Choose Configuration" window. The "Select Configuration" window opens, where you can select the configuration file to open. If you select a file from a specified directory, it will be opened in the current form, if you select a file from another directory, it will be opened in the "Select configuration" form. The selected file is opened in the "Select Configuration" form, which has full access to the entire contents of the configuration file. Therefore, configuration files with protected access, can only be opened and changed in this form. To save the configuration file after opening it, select "Write and close" and the file will be saved.
