The narrative is being written by a series of award shows, but from what's seen and read so far, this year was a pretty strong one. As far as the "best" list is concerned, though, let's skip the part where the games that blew our minds and instead focus on the games that players wouldn't mind having on their consoles or PC. This year's games are: the eSport Strategy Game of the Year, the Strategy Game of the Year, the Action Game of the Year, the Adventure Game of the Year, the RPG of the Year, the Visual Novel of the Year, the MMO of the Year, the Game of the Year for Android/iOS, the Console Game of the Year, the Best of the Year, the Most Innovative Game of the Year, and the Representative of the Best of the Year. So far, the choices are made by Polygon's editors and critics, but each year they're also given to audience poll and players in our network. The list is being written throughout this weekend, and we'll update it here as new lists come in. If you want to keep an eye on your own favorite choices, you can download the list as a CSV here. The Game of the Year is the only list that doesn't include a winner. Here are the contenders: The Elder Scrolls Online Overwatch The Division Cuphead Dark Souls III Beyond: Two Souls Stardew Valley Diablo III Fire Emblem Fates Assassin's Creed: Syndicate Return of the Obra Dinn Death Stranding You can also look at our nominees here. Below is the methodology being used to count votes and create the ranking for the various categories. The Games of the Year list counts many different types of game across multiple platforms, using the following methodology: Game Type Points awarded: 20 for the Strategy game; 15 for the Action game; 10 for the RPG; 5 for the Visual Novel; 2 for the MMO; 1 for each type of game (except Sports 3e33713323
