Now, instead of taking cash, they'll take your land. Jim Stewart is a realtor with 24 years of experience. He says new laws let developers build extremely large subdivisions with no limits. "They can put out a lot of land on the market for new developments," he says. "They can use it as a giant subsidy to build and build and build, and the local governments love it because they can sell more, they can build more." And in some cases, it's real estate developers, or agents within the industry, who are most often committing fraud. “In the rural areas, you have the kind of fraud that usually happens,” he says. “For instance, someone comes to your door and they’ve got a map in their hand and you look at the map and see this area that you like ... and they’ll say, ‘Oh, well, the new subdivision is going
