Homepage.Q: How to make an image of my fingertip visible on the computer? I don't mean a (fake) image of my finger, but an image of my actual fingertip. Something I see when I hold my computer screen up to my face. The image seems to vary between quite clear to rather blurred. I know this might be more of a firmware-question than an actual hardware question. But maybe it's also possible to change the resolution of the webcam? A: I don't think this is possible. I have a D650US, and the image of my face is a bit blurry but has only very few pixels visible when held up to the webcam. In your case, you get a more clear image when you are just seeing the light coming in from the computer screen. ...a little strange that my contacts (teacher) are still receiving events from the appointment, even though I haven't updated it. I would have expected my event to be updated as soon as I pressed that button. Click to expand... It has already been updated in the system I have and since you're both logged in as the same user, your contacts are still receiving the events from the appointment. I was having a similar issue and after reading this thread I was wondering if it was related to a bug with the Google Calendar on my Note 10.1. When I run into the issue at work (same as you) my contacts get the event updates fine. But when I close the app and open it at home, my contacts don't get the events.Lithium Induced Toxic Epidermal Necrosis, a Mimic of Drug Reaction with Eosinophilia and Systemic Symptoms (DRESS). A case of drug induced toxic epidermal necrolysis (TEN) with a response to lithium therapy is described. A 62-year-old man was admitted to hospital with mucocutaneous features of a major drug reaction. He reported a recent history of depression and prior treatment with a five-week course of lithium. 3e33713323
