Testosterone secretion in temporomandibular joint syndrome: preliminary report. Basal testosterone (T) and cortisol (C) values and responses to the dexamethasone suppression test (DST) were obtained from six patients with temporomandibular joint syndrome (TMJS). Four of the six had normal DST responses, but T values were subnormal for the four patients with a clinical indication of polycystic ovarian disease (PCOD). T and C tests were not performed in four patients with unrevealing physical exam or an absent response to a gonadotropin releasing hormone (GnRH) challenge test. Testosterone values were within normal limits in these patients; however, no isovolumetric physical exam was performed to exclude PCOD. Results suggest that patients with TMJS are unlikely to have PCOD or other disorders that would affect T production, but that it is worthwhile to perform a test for PCOD or to at least perform an isovolumetric physical exam to exclude a diagnosis of PCOD in patients with both normal DST and T levels. Q: PostgreSQL psql - how to add tags to a query? I've been using psql when I make a query and I would like to add tags as delimited by commas, like I've seen in the case of Redis. I was wondering if anyone can give me a couple of tips on how to do this. My example is making an insert query. If the query is 'insert into table_name values (1,2,3)' how can I specify a list of tags like 'tag1','tag2','tag3' to indicate where they are used. Any help would be much appreciated. I'm new to psql. A: One way to do this is to use the UPSERT function of PostgreSQL: INSERT INTO T VALUES(1, 2, 3) ON CONFLICT(id) DO UPDATE SET V1 = i1, V2 = i2, V3 = i3; A query of this form does an insert only if the id does not exist yet
