It's part of their job. At the end of every arc, you'll get a peek at what they're planning out for the hero's next chapter. Very often it's intentionally vague, with a vague explanation offered. It makes sense. It's smart business. It allows for a much better story in the long-term, but also keeps it all very tight. But there's a time to have it and a time not to have it. So what kind of arc would you like to see, if it could be sprung on you in a five-year span? If you had to have it? We've got a few of them for you here. Some obvious, some more obscure. Some you've probably thought of. Some you have never thought of. We'll start with a few that we'd love to see (and a few that we'd hate to see). The Flash Admittedly, one doesn't want to give up the Flash too soon. The character was a part of the great '90s run and was only able to revive that in 2012, so there's work to be done. Still, it's time to step up. But there are several challenges that The Flash faces moving forward. For one, it won't be the Flash, but The Flash, that will be the ongoing series. That'll lead to some changes in tone and perspective. But it's also been a really strong series
