Nature Wallpapers are a good idea if you are into Nature. These are special wallpapers to have on your computer or phone or any other device. Nature Wallpapers also have great pictures of flowers, plants, water, ocean, etc. in the previous section, we are concerned about both polynomials and rational functions. the case of real polynomials is trivial, since complex roots produce complex roots from the original complex polynomial, and real roots from its real part. The case of rational functions is much more complicated. A ratio of two polynomials in particular can be split into monic polynomials with the roots of the denominator in the interval $[-1,1]$, so the "complex roots" of this rational function are really considered as roots of two monic polynomials having the same absolute value. However, this splitting is useless in the general case: the above roots belong to the field of fractions of the ring of polynomials with real coefficients (which is a much bigger ring). Thus, we have to consider the roots of the original polynomial as a part of its field of fractions, and the "roots" of the ration as a part of the same field. The denominator of the rational function also is a polynomial with real coefficients. We can find the field of fractions of it, and then the field of fractions of its "roots". For this purpose it is worth noting that the fields
