Icey Chicken have been captured by the Icey Chicken Cult. You must defeat and free them to redeem them. In a demo posted on the Nintendo web site, the console appears to have a fairly basic user interface. You can browse games by genre, download games, view or create save files, and more. Its shape is familiar to anyone who has touched an NES console in recent years. You can also see the Nintendo Entertainment System controllers next to the NES and Game Boy controllers, but the game controllers don't appear to have analog sticks (most NES controllers do, however). While the touch screen appears to be functioning on the NES, it's not a full one: a small menu that appears onscreen can be moved around using its edges, but the screen itself can't be touched.

Q: Wirelessly and easily connect devices to my Ubuntu PC? I am using a Raspberry Pi 3 to control some devices connected to my PC. My Pi has an Ethernet port, but I'd rather not have to use a cable for it. I like to use wireless for my devices, and my Asus PC usually has bluetooth disabled, so wifi is pretty much the only way to go for now. I use Ubuntu 16.04 on my PC, and I've heard there may be issues with Ubuntu 16.04 and Raspberry Pi 3 (not yet updated), but I figured a fresh install would fix the issue. I have seen the GUI for Ubuntu's wireless manager, and after reading an article I'm aware that this won't work with the Raspberry Pi. I'm aware of a driver which might work, but I'm not sure where to get it and I want it to work out of the box. I've also heard about a wifi dongle with an app similar to iTunes, but since I'm not familiar with it I'm not sure how it works. The main hurdle I'm facing here is that I have many devices connected to my PC, and I don't want to always have to plug them in. They need to be hooked up to my WiFi, or else I have to unplug them from one of my USB ports and plug them back in. This isn't really a good solution since the devices are becoming very expensive. As I've mentioned, I would like to avoid using a cable for my Pi. If someone could tell me what hardware I need, and how to set up my network I would greatly appreciate it.
