Why Is the Streetfighter II Luigi Sound Mod Better? Simply put: No, it's not. The sound mod definitely benefits from a good patch and works wonders with a real-time stereo effect, but it's still not as good as the model's in-game counterpart, Luigi. For starters, it just sounds like it's coming from the wrong direction. Playing as Luigi on the default Fire Flower, here are the default audio cues for when Luigi takes a hit: Again, there's an issue of playing back the audio the wrong way. But Luigi's aura begins at a quite a low volume, and it doesn't just start big and get louder over time, like the model's in-game audio cues. You can also hear Luigi's footsteps and such, but they're not as audible as they are in the game. Last but not least, the mod's soundtrack is more of a distraction than anything else. But when it comes to the actual audio effects coming from Luigi's aura, they're quite good, so there's that. The mod brings down a lot of the level of immersion, though.

Peer-support in the workplace: Gender matters A recent study of the use of peer support in the workplace, which followed employees for three years, reveals something rather interesting: While male employees benefited to the tune of 30%, the corresponding figure for female employees was only 13%. This has two implications. There is a need to recognise that the concept of peer support in the workplace not only works for men – that women too can benefit from peer support. The problem The study measured the impact of workplace-based peer support programs in 13 corporations. It also looked at the implementation of the programs and the programs' success based on the number of peer-support attendees. The results were quite surprising – men benefitted from the peer-support programs much more than women. The study found that men benefitted 30% from the peer-support program compared to 13% from female employees. However, the researchers did find positive signs for women. The results showed that female employees benefitted in a similar proportion of times that male employees benefitted. It is difficult to explain this finding, but the researchers suggested that there was no difference in the contributions of the two sexes. Rather, they are equal in their capacity to be an effective peer supporter. While there is no question that males tend to get more support than females,
