Developmental timing in insects is regulated at the level of protein synthesis by temporally co-regulated genes. One large subfamily of these genes that have been very well characterized in Drosophila is those encoding members of the basic helix-loop-helix-leucine zipper (bHLH-ZIP) family of transcription factors. Recent genetic experiments have demonstrated that these proteins play an important role in regulating the timing of events during early embryogenesis in the lepidopteran moth, Manduca sexta. In this study we have undertaken a molecular characterization of three maz genes from M. sexta whose corresponding cDNA clones were
