It is also known that smartphones and tablets are used by children to pass messages to other children at an alarming rate - the average teenager sends over 1,000 texts per month. The high numbers of text messages children are being sent has serious consequences. A large proportion of these texts are from strangers - known as "spammers". Parents do not understand that the information from these spammers can be very damaging as they are used to buying and selling things online. Some of these so-called "unwanted" texts can contain: Photos of children or adults taken without their permission, Personal information about them such as their address, phone number, home address or school, and Media such as video or photos, That these texts and the links to websites are designed to take money from vulnerable children. Often the texts will have a link, and your child will click on the link - potentially exposing them
