Q: Cron Job to download BACnet log from Ethernet port to text file

Hi I am trying to set up a cron job to download a BACnet log from an Ethernet port. The log contains all events including identification and date/time stamp. For a long time the log was downloaded via IP address in the port range of 192.168.1.80-192.168.1.89, now we are getting a new IP address range of 192.168.1.87-192.168.1.130 but it will still only download the log into a single file. It is possible to set up a cron job that will just download the log every few minutes like this?: From: 192.168.1.87 To: 192.168. c9d1549cdd

One button or swipe to play, one button to share. Survive on the frontier where rival factions constantly compete for resources and power. There's no safe haven, no recharging stations and no help in the form of friendly survivors. Choose carefully and make the right decisions: I'll lose a group member to an armed attack, or I can protect them by going unnoticed. I'll use my resources to help a follower as he or she rations food, or I can help a rival faction spread propaganda as they plan their attack on a walled compound. Decide: Your destiny will be shaped by the decisions you make over the course of the game. Search and collect resources to build and upgrade your group. Survive and protect your home and your loved ones. Fight zombie hordes and battle hostile human groups. Choose your leader's destiny as you upgrade their abilities. See the game

What's new in Differently Fast:

Here's a song that started with me thinking about different universes and expanding dimensions, and then it took some inspiration from Pape the Frog, and became something totally different! Enjoy! * All in all I liked the song, but I'm not sure it sells as well as I originally thought it would. I hear a crackle of space thunder, Starts and subs and sparkles— Somewhere off that far black horizon, Space has opened up. The void draws closer— Are we far from there now? Can't we see the Wall Of white light rising above the sky? Oh, so close— And yet not close enough! Wandering through the inky night, Are we alone after all? Are we just passengers on the ship We call this vast, black, eternal space? Whoo, we're lost! We're lost! Ah, if we go back, our crew will never meet us here, We'll never find our way home. Oh, if you could only see the world As we do in the cosmos, our wonderful one. Our universe, our ocean of light! All this and more, It's there for you and I to see...! * And what is all this? Are we stars, traveling in the night? Or are we tangled in the night, Looking for a different star To rest our eyes on bright and white? Carry forward a few minutes, and we know... We come here from somewhere else. Our home—a star of a different hue— Must be very different from here! Oh, if you could only see the world As we do in the cosmos, our beautiful one. Our Universe—our Ocean of Light! All this and more, It's there for you and I to see...! * I think the song needs to be told as a story. We all know the story of the night traveler, or the one who told the tale, or the one who found the traveler. It should be a two-part song. "We're lost!" not "Oh—we're lost!" At first I thought it was a bit like "Oh my cat

In the distant future, civilizations have reached a point of visual perfection where life is a blank canvas on a canvas the size of the universe. However, humanity's chosen form of expression is not animation, but speech. Having spent the majority of their existence developing their digital language, humanity's language and communication skills have become a balance between precision and delivery, and away from the primitive exuberance found in their natural visual languages. HATSUNE IS AVAILABLE NOW!
