What's new in Elden Ring:

> 10 Feb 2015 06:54:31 +0000Our game media partners have released cute GIFs for you to enjoy!f you are new to Star Trek Online, or if you are a returning player, you may have noticed some changes to the UI. One of the most noticeable changes is the appearance of popular keyboard shortcuts. You can click here to view a cool GIF with these keyboard shortcuts in action.

The new ship brokers have changed their appearance too. The top menu has a more polished look, and the bottom navigation now looks more like a website.

Speaking of new, we've also got two new missions added to the weekly missions schedule: The SHEDET (Short Handed Erector) and the Commode (command specific order to the queue processor). Come along on Friday for an announcement of more new missions.

We've even updated our weekly patch notes to now feature the new keyboard shortcuts. Check them out.

I would like to create a dynamic color panel and it should be able to resize automatically based on the size of the browser window. A: Many possibilities for this, take a look at jsbin: The use of the red div would be quite easy if you had the actual style assigned to the div in another javascript file. In the demo, I am just hiding and showing it to the user depending on the resolution of their screen. The show/hide itself is done with a single line of jQuery, then the show/hide control is done using CSS. Visual Studio 11 is now generally available - shawndumas ===== georgemcbay Coming from VS2010 I can't recall a single thing that I am excited about in this new release (neither good nor bad). If Microsoft could actually get a version of VS that was modern looking (like what Eclipse is doing with the ADT), I would seriously start paying attention to them again. ~~~ tantalar To be fair, 2010 was _really_ ugly. ~~~ georgemcbay I agree, but in my defense the plan (from what I could tell) was to continue the dark mode theme until either they announced a new look was on the way or the next big release brought with it new changes. As an end
