Naval battles

- Against a wide variety of enemy ships, battle with a fleet belonging to feudal lords who form alliances.
- Rearrange the ranks of the fleets and customize the strategy of war.
- Play the game in 2P against those who choose the other side.
- Battle a wide range of battleships, and defend the ship from a variety of thrust attacks from the enemy.

The ability to draw upon great power at the expense of your life

- An ever-growing number of Elden Rings fills your life gauge, which can be raised and lowered by consuming life. It costs between 10,000 and 50,000 life to raise the life gauge by one level. When the life gauge is increased to 100% (a maximum of 30,000), the next rotation can activate the potential to use the most powerful attack from DESTINY, a fatal factor that cannot be avoided.

Start at the bottom in the Lands Between, and ascend to the position of a lord

- Upon creation, you begin at level 0 as a servant of an unknown caravan lord. In Path of Dawn, you'll start at level 15 and become a caravan lord.

Expand the number of lords, and meet new people as you explore

- In addition to the usual social interaction with people, you can trade goods from merchants, but the trade is limited to a small range. Also, if you become a caravan lord, you will be able to expand your territory to other parts of the world.
- If the caravan lord values your trade above all else, he might talk to you and ask for help with defeating an invading army. If you're willing to accept the danger, you can become an Elden Lord, and fight together with the caravan lord.
- Even if the caravan lord despises you, it won't be an issue. The caravan lord who paid you will never suffer any ill feelings towards you. That caravan lord will also become a friend to all the people you help and make contact with.

Battle again and again in endless succession in the same

Medicare Advantage status is possibly getting a 21st century makeover as the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) appears poised to release details on a potentially huge overhaul of the troubled program in the wake of billions of dollars in accounting misclassifications tied to the Affordable Care Act. To qualify for Medicare Advantage, insurers must prove to the government they are better than the private health insurance market. In its latest budget proposals, the CMS encouraged flexibility in determining which programs needed to be examined for any reforms. "We are open to the idea that a number of these [Medicare Advantage] plans could be across other payers, insurance plans, or other program designs," said a CMS official, who declined to be identified pending a formal policy announcement. program, accounting for about one quarter of all Medicare spending. The program is complex as insurers often maintain their own corporate headquarters, not the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS). Nationwide, Medicare Advantage hospitals' cut-overs has significantly outstripped shifts out of private health insurance, which is thought to be one of the causes of deep budget shortfalls because of ambiguous enrollment and contribution data. Preliminary details on a potential leadership overhaul will be unveiled by CMS later this year, likely with a policy paper expected next summer, the CMS official indicated. Tapping a Health Services Council
The CMS still is considering tapping an often-controversial industry group, the Health Services Council, which has strong experience with Medicare Advantage under a $60 billion federal program that may provide the most potential for wholesale changes. In addition to aiding in national efforts, the HSC is responsible for several dozen large regional insurance networks including Medicare Advantage carriers that provide quality metrics to Medicare.
