“With ‘HyperMotion Technology,’ the on-screen player will have an extremely realistic athletic performance that will reflect the player’s actual athletic abilities.” FIFA The on-screen player will have an extremely realistic athletic performance that will reflect the player’s actual athletic abilities, right down to post-tackle speed and mobility. The technology is so groundbreaking that FIFA and adidas have been able to capture every single key defining moment of the high-intensity match, including takedowns, reversals, flick-ons, counters and long balls. “Everything a player does within a match will be captured and accurately reflected in gameplay,” said Marc Watson, Senior Director, FIFA and FIFA Interactive Entertainment World Ranking. “With ‘HyperMotion Technology,’ the on-screen player will have an extremely realistic athletic performance that will reflect the player’s actual athletic abilities.” The Realism “The technology is unique in that it captures everything a player does in-game at real-time speed. This means that during a match, the player’s movement will be affected by almost every single move of the opponent and the type of challenge is reflected in the way they move around the pitch,” says Duncan Wilson, Head of Motion Capture and Animation at adidas. “In fact, even during replays and training, the technology will accurately reflect what a player is doing in real life.” Watch the cinematic of the technology in action in the ‘Embrace the Moment’ short film above. The Technology The motion capture technology provides specific metrics in-game that allow FIFA to capture and make accurate decisions in gameplay. “We use these metrics to power the on-screen player,” said Watson. “This helps us turn generic animations into realistic, fluid movements that make the player feel more athletic and interactive. During gameplay, the player will move in the appropriate way to move with the ball.” The technology is deployed on the player by using a set of custom-fit 10-second motion capture suits. To facilitate that, the player plays the match wearing the suit, but in normal game conditions they play without it. The technology is then used to help bring the player’s performance to life on-screen. “The player’s movement is captured with a set of custom-fit motion capture
