Sleeping beauty reacts to BJ's spicy tofu You may want to use different body language next time you're with your friends. It's been a couple of weeks since the first post here and I'm starting to get some traffic. I'm basically getting a thank you note from the Delmar, New York guy who wrote the post about BJ's spicy tofu. I tried it and actually like it. I'd offer some advice on body language and cross-cultural communication, but I have no idea what cross-cultural communication is. The fact is I did it, something I've never done before. I just wrote my thoughts down. The day I had BJ's, I mentioned to friends that I liked it. I asked friends what they thought, but I only talked to one other person who was with me. It's been a little over a week and I haven't talked to her about it, so we're still friends. We had gone to BJ's several times before and have never found what we were looking for. For her, BJ's is the frozen yogurt place. It's two minutes from her place. We found some decent food one time when we went there, but mostly we just wanted to hang out with her and drink coffee. A few times I've been single and I've felt the temptation to just go over and introduce myself, but I've always resisted.Q: MPMoviePlayerController Controls Disappearing after App Launch I have a functioning app that shows all the controls to play and pause (still using the MPMoviePlayerController). Recently, after launching the app and showing the controls, the controls disappear when the video plays. When the controls reappear, the controls show through the first video and then disappear again when I play the second video. Here is my code, any help would be appreciated. - (void) playVideo:(NSString *)videoName :(NSString *)fileName :(NSString *) filePath :(NSString *) fileExtension { //initialize MPMoviePlayerController MPMoviePlayerController *player = [[MPMoviePlayerController alloc] initWithContentURL:[NSURL URLWithString:filePath]]; if([player respondsToSelector:@selector(setMovieSourceType:)]) [player setMovieSourceType:MPMovieSourceTypeFile];

Sure, Google will not exactly be gone after its IPO – given that it will be responsible for 12% of parent company Alphabet's revenue – but it could be competing with itself. OnLive's future really comes down to its subscription service that includes gaming, and whether that is a sustainable business. We know that
