| Significance of Photoshop Layering --- | --- With most of Photoshop's tools, you only see the effects as you apply them. In general, you need to click the tool for the image to be affected. However, a layer is different. As you apply layers on top of each other, the effects of what you apply change according to which layers are on top. Many people fail to understand this concept, and as a result they don't realize how powerful Photoshop is. A layered approach can allow you to manipulate the canvas in many ways. Although Photoshop originally launched with a selection tool that has long been considered a design staple, it's now an important way to make changes to your design. | --- | ---

Q: Using a variable to specify a separate column in a range merge I would like to change the background color in rows of a data column based on some of the values in another column. Therefore, I have implemented a VLOOKUP to look up the "HSI" value from another sheet, as shown here: =VLOOKUP(E3,sheet2!$A:$D,2,FALSE) Where =E3 : is the cell that is looked up sheet2!$A:$D is the data on the sheet where the lookup is done 2 : is the column for lookup FALSE: is the False return so that it does not wrap the data on the sheet Now, I can get the range to merge by using: =F2:F10 However, if I try this: =G2:G10 it does not work, because it is merging over the HSI column and not the actual row. Is there a way to add in the HSI column when making the merge on rows? A: For a 2D search operation like VLOOKUP, Index/Match is the best tool for the job. The following macro uses Index/Match to return the rows in Sheet2 whose row values match the lookup value in E3. In each returned cell, the Index argument E3 is displayed as text, and the Match argument F2 is then used to find the real row number. If the Result is blank, the cell background turns white. Otherwise, it turns gray. Sub Background_Changes() Dim i As Long Dim lngMatch As Long Application.ScreenUpdating = False With ActiveSheet With.Range("E3").CurrentRegion lngMatch = Application.Match(.Columns(1),.Rows(2), 0) For i = 2 To 10 If Application.Index(.Rows(i), lngMatch, 0, 2) Then .

Brushes in Photoshop CC If you are a beginner, the free version of Photoshop CC does not have any brushes. You need to download and install Photoshop brushes to start using the brushes with ease. The table below summarizes the basic features of the brush category. Applying Brush Basics Apply Brushes basics To start with brushes, select the Brush tool from the Toolbox. You can then click and hold the tool to open the Brush Tool Options. Here you can modify the basic settings of the brush: Select a Brush Size : This property determines the size of the brush, like a pencil. The smallest size is.1 pixel. The default value is 1 pixel. Brush Tip Shape : When you create a brush, a default shape is assigned. It varies from a solid point to a 1 pixel square. You can select either of the options. Brush Tip Options : You can also control the size of the brush to which you are applying the paint. The range from which you can set is from a 1 pixel square to a 1.1 pixel square. If you do not specify the size, the software calculates the size. Brush Angle : This determines the angle of the brush to the canvas. You can set the brush angle anywhere between 0 and 90 degrees. The default brush angle is 45 degrees. Brushes and How They Work Brush Basics The simplest way to apply brushes is to press the Command-B key combination to insert the brush. The software automatically displays a brush window. Press the Ctrl key to activate the brush selection or the Shift key to activate the brush tool. This brush can be saved for future use. You can save a brush for the next time you use it or delete the currently active brush. In Photoshop CC, you can also download brushes you like. Photoshop CC provides multiple methods for applying a brush. You can either select a brush or use the Brush tool. Below are listed different ways that you can paint with brushes. Quick-Paint Using the Brush Tool: You can simply use the Brush tool to paint. In this method, you can use the Left-Click or Right-Click method to paint. You may need to click and hold the brush tool for the paint brush to appear. Open the Brush Tool Options window and set the brush size to 1 pixel in the Tool Options window.
