PicaJet is an application which enables you to manage, modify and share your digital images. It can be seamlessly configured by inexperienced individuals. The interface of the tool is clean and pretty intuitive. PicaJet can be set to automatically search for folders with images or you can browse the computer yourself. So, you can copy and move pictures to other locations, rotate, flip and crop them, adjust the brightness level, remove the red eye effect, as well as send items to mobile phones or via emails. In addition, you can arrange and group items (e.g. by location, name, day), use a search function, zoom in and out, convert or resize multiple pictures at the same time, adjust the time stamp, as well as set photographs as wallpapers. From the 'Options' screen you can change the measurement unit, make the app automatically rotate images by using the EXIF orientation, customize the thumbnails style and background, optimize the database, as well as change the interface skin and language, among others. The program uses a moderate-to-high amount of system resources, has a good response time and includes user documentation. PicaJet did not cause us any problems during our tests; the tool did not freeze, crash or pop up error dialogs. All in all, PicaJet comes with some interesting features for managing, modifying and sharing image files. It can be easily figured out by novices, thanks to its intuitive layout. Is there any way to get the data from that field via query. I don't want to user the CAST command in the db2 since it will convert the data to some other datatype and loss the data. Thanks in advance. A: The DB2 SDK contains code to get a BLOB value and there is an example in the doc on how to do it. You could always avoid CAST as you do not have to remember to do that for EVERY time to retrieve the data. Example code from the doc: SQL> DECLARE 2 l_clob CLOB; 3 l_cursor NUMBER; 4 l_cnt NUMBER; 5 BEGIN 6 l_cl
