Buy The Game F.E.A.R. in the Dreamcast The Dreamcast version of F.E.A.R. is the first stand-alone sequel of id Software's first-person shooter series. The game was first released on December 14, 2001. Development The Dreamcast version of the game is similar to id Software's original Half-Life in that the player uses a character named Adam who is seen throughout the game's missions in a first-person perspective. Half-Life is used for inspiration, and it can be seen in the game that some ideas were taken from the Half-Life source engine. Set in the post-apocalyptic United States, F.E.A.R. focuses more on supernatural elements. The trailer for the game showed a skull-like bullet-time effect that was used to deliver a hallucination to the player. id Software has since announced that the bullet-time effect will be present in F.E.A.R. On March 14, 2002, a Dreamcast release date was scheduled to be announced at around the same time as the release of the game's official website, but the announcement did not take place. On May 20, 2002, the Dreamcast version of the game was revealed at E3 2002. It was promoted as featuring night and day cycles, with daytime being a new day-night cycle that is not seen in other games in the F.E.A.R. series. The game also features a new environment, a number of additional weapons, and three enemy classes that are currently not seen in the other games. On March 3, 2005, an Xbox port of the game was announced, which was released on June 22, 2006. However, it is not the Dreamcast version. On February 28, 2007, F.E.A.R. 2, the Xbox 360 and PlayStation 2 versions of the game, were given early limited-time releases. The limited time releases were on March

Story 16 Maisie hated the music downstairs. She'd rather just have a quiet night at home. Not that she gets much downtime. Since their father died years ago, she and her mother just about split their time between housework and the shop. And now, she was babysitting the one thing she knows will create some distance between herself and her mother. "It's The Puppy Sisterhood. The soundtrack I bought them," Maisie lied. Walking down the stairs, she had to shield her eyes from the flashing strobe, but it did help hide her exasperation at the shower in the doorway. "Hey! You never said you weren't bringing dinner!" Mrs. Riley, the new neighbour downstairs, exclaimed as she passed. "Yes, hello?" Maisie's mother answered over the pitter patter of the shuffling music. Maisie could hear them dancing, what's left of it, anyway. "Shower," Mrs. Riley shouted. "He's crazy!" "Yes. This is it." Hearing her mother's tone, Maisie quickly made her way to the kitchen table, where she'd set out the instructions for the game and the board. "I've eaten already." "What've you got, Maisie?" She heard the shorts snap open and then the sliding clatter as her mother's blue bikini slipped off the table onto the floor. "There wasn't anything in the fridge, so I thought I'd try a lasagna," she lied. "You don't have to stay. If you don't like the music, tell Mr. Prentice." The music was horrible, and her mother must have heard it too, because she began to cry again. Maisie took a step closer to her, fighting the growing temptation to turn and run. "What's this game doing here, anyway?" Her mother sounded so sad. "I can't even remember the point." "Sorry. It's a super high-tech way of telling people apart. You know, like
