After starting as a professional stunt driver your whole life, you suddenly find yourself on the run. You're told your brother, and two of your best friends have been murdered by a notorious mob. And you discover that you are apparently responsible: you've just been framed for their murders. It's up to you to clear your name with the help of a girl who just happens to drive a steam-powered car. So, how do you clear your name? How do you escape the mob and find the people who are really responsible for your friends' death? And how do you do that without running headlong into a police chase? The answer to all these questions is simple: you make a lucky choice. This is Car Mechanic Flipper, a mad, mad, mad follow-the-ice-cream-to-the-person game. An arcadey driving game with a mix of puzzling, sliding and fighting elements. You'll be sliding, driving and even hopping on the back of a giant ice cream as you navigate around the city, all the while completing challenges and collecting the most amazing ice cream machines. Not all of them. The ice cream machines that actually make the ice cream. Build it up, break it down. As with Flipper's debut title, Codename Entertainment presents a brand new gameplay mechanic called 'Puzzle Power'. In this game, there are Ice Cream Machines, Ice Cream Pods and even the occasional Fire Truck. These are places where you'll find collectible parts. But how you manage to unlock the parts in each place is very different. For example, there's an ice cream pod in each level where you'll need to build up a 'Puzzle Power' bar. When you do, the ice cream pod will deposit some parts, but only when you're at a certain point in the level. A Fire Truck will have a limited time during which you must build a maximum of 9 Puzzle Power bars to unlock a level. Likewise, each ice cream machine will only give away its pieces when you've built a certain number of Puzzle Power bars. Meanwhile, Ice Cream Pods won't give away any parts unless you have at least 50 Puzzle Power. And sometimes the parts can be delivered by an unexpected place: a drunk man. The best recipes in town. As you might expect,

Game Under the Warehouse is a "point and click" platform game. The point and click mechanic works in a similar fashion to the way you would enter a text message on a phone. That is, you move through the environment, and click on objects to interact with them. If the object you click on is interactive, it will react to your click in some way. Some items, like switches, may be turned on, off or toggled. Click on objects to investigate and learn more about the area and its inhabitants. The game is fully-featured and has six main locations to explore. Each location is a large, nearly-immersive area full of objects you can interact with. In each area, you are likely to find multiple "chases" of items. A chase is an item that you are to retrieve and bring to your home on the game's end of level screen. You must bring one of each chase to the end of the level for a high score. Each of the six areas is unique in design and features different challenges to overcome. Three levels from each area (approximately 6) are available for play. If you complete all of the levels in a particular area, the game presents you with a large, surreal puzzle to solve and end the level. The puzzle takes place in a large, underground, near-abandoned construction site. The goal is to correctly assemble the number of crates from a number of given puzzle pieces without having items with similar shapes and measurements clash with one another.
