anxiety in older adults. This study examined the structure of older adult depression, anxiety and stress. The Revised Depression Anxiety Stress Scales (DASS-21) was administered to a sample of older adults (n=324). Exploratory Factor Analysis revealed four principal factor solutions for the depression, anxiety and stress scales, respectively. Further analyses found that the Depression factor, the Anxiety factor and the Stress factor showed good fit for the data (n.s.). Good construct validity was demonstrated for the Depression, Anxiety and Stress scales. These findings support the use of the DASS-21 as a valid and reliable measure for depression and anxiety in later life. The findings also provide further evidence for the applicability of the original DASS-21 in a non-clinical, older adult sample.
