What's new:

DLC announced At Gamescom in Cologne next week Wargaming is set to announce a new DLC for Kingdom Two Crowns, which is a paid beta version of the game in progress. The full feature list won't be revealed of course, but as a teaser I can confirm that players will be able to play in a much more accurate starting region, with a much more accurate starting region. At least, what's starting is the start of a larger war between larger countries where the main thrust will be the expansion of territories, conquest, war and gain of resources. These kinds of features have been promised long before, but almost a year after launch when the basic premise of the game in how to play it as a sandbox game is still pretty new for most players. The first beta to test all this will be announced some time in October and will be released shortly thereafter on PC and mobile devices (of course all this requires the development of these and we've been promised these two months already). 55 Agreed, it has been a long time coming since the initial RC and K2C prices. They should have prepared for this price drop when demand for K2C surpassed the development team's expectations. Looking at the community members opinion on the subject... the game is becoming very popular with the day to day users, and still 'in' for hardcore gamers. The developed system, PVP battles and compromises to rules to enable battles at a 1-vs-1 scale are popular to most of the players, and provide something different, that don't get boring/repetitive as with PVE or PVP vs PVP. It is great for competitive PVE players to see and test their abilities against the AI, without the risk of PvP. Breaking the K2C anniversary wild, and of course 70% off its price in a matter of less than a week. This should have been anticipated way before. To make it short: K2C is doing well in PVE+PVP, and with no major changes or expansion planned, I'm quite confident it will do well in the future. The audience just for the game competition has grown, and it is proven by players theory, and some governmental policies with more limit on PvP to increase economic values and ease the sociopolitical fabric. Unfortunately, some general users who is affected most... has the less income, and the harder

'The Archive' is a game about memory. You remember, don't you? It's the past; it's your childhood; it's a place of dreams and memories. You're in it, right now. It's a place with no clear boundaries, no fixed history. It's a place for young dreams: for youth, for the first time, for trying, for imaginary possibilities. It's a place for innocence. The Archive is free. And yet it's not free. It's free to use and explore, but not free to create anything new. Not free to modify anything. Take the measure of a place by looking at how it works for you. The Archive is not only a tool to explore - it's your playground. Are you a navigation expert? Do you know where you're going? Well, go ahead and find your way. If you need help, there are hints, there are illustrations, and there are notes for you to take. Do you need a map? Are you looking for a path to follow? You've got one, trust me. And you'll get used to it very quickly. The Archive is about trial and error. You're free to explore the space and the possibilities. You can even die, you're not constrained. But do you really want to play alone? A level lets you invite others to share your adventure. No, don't forget - it's your adventure. You decide the game's ending - you decide what happens in this place of free navigation. You decide who lives, who dies, and why. You define its history, every time you take a step forward. What are you waiting for? Get lost in The Archive right now! Take A Trip Through The Archive: • Practice navigation and discover all the routes, the secret paths, the shortcuts, the stairs, and the ways to reach new places that you will only be able to reach once you get to know this place of yours. • Explore the space, find all the photographs, and read the notes and the stories. • Try different methods and solutions for every problem you might encounter. • Make your own collections of notes and objects, and store them in your backpack or on a personal cloud. • Manage your toolbox: repair a roof, repair a machine, build a road, repair a wall, fix the net, fix the windmill, call on the fire brigade, repair the
