Xbox 360 Avatar is a nice tool that allows Xbox 360 users to customize their avatar from the other Windows gadgets on their PC. Sure, virtual pets can be fun, but more often than not, they're just there to look after you and earn you points in a game you probably don't really care about anyway. That's fine, so long as the game is good. However, Sony has released a dogfighting simulator that's so awesome, it's borderline good enough for a real pet. Yes, you're probably thinking: "What kind of game would have a dogfighting game as its main selling point?" It's a simulator, of course, a racing game. The difference is that the cars are robotic in shape and move exactly like real dogs. The game has been developed by a team at the Institute of Automation, Thatcham Research Centre and Cranfield University. Sure, it's not a 100 per cent accurate simulation. Manage your pet allowance The cars don't actually have bodies like real dogs, but they have an engine, a steering wheel and an accelerator pedal. On the ground, you simply control their direction and speed. While driving, the dog will also be filled with gas. If you want your 'pet' to win, then you need to drive it as fast as you can! Each dog on the track comes with a telemetry cable, allowing data to be sent to the race control room, which then displays it on the race screen. The dog race When you're racing, you see your opponent's dog on the game screen. You can choose to follow him, jump over him or lead him. The race sees the dog make turns and hit bumps, and the more aggressive you are, the higher its speed. After each race, your car is loaded with credits and the time is displayed. As in real dogfights, there's a points system on the track. To win the race, you have to put the most points on the dog. If you win the race, you also unlock a new dog in the track. Although the dog pet simulator is more of a concept than an actual game, it's one that's being developed as a useful tool for researchers. Dogfighting opponents may provide a good proxy for real dog

What's New in the?

Avatar is an Xbox 360 gadget that allows you to create an image of your gamertag. The app lets you customize your avatar's face, body and clothes. If you have an Xbox account, then it's likely that you spent at least a few minutes to create an animate avatar. Xbox 360 Avatar is a light sidebar gadget that can decorate the desktop. The app comes with a simple interface that requires no previous experience with this type of programs. The widget doesn't need any additional apps to work, as it integrates among the other Windows gadgets on the system. All you need to do to is to add the gamertag and the program immediately displays the avatar you created within the platform. By clicking on the head of the avatar, a small window is displayed that gives more details regarding the account. Furthermore, you may also access the account page by clicking the tag. The window is opened by the default web browser. The app supports multiple instances, which means that you can add any in-game friends to the
