What's New in the Adobe Photoshop CS3?

The present invention relates to a stabilizer system for determining the presence of air or other gas in a surrounding environment. More particularly, the present invention relates to a stabilizer system which uses a high density ambient fluid (such as oil) to be used as a stable reference for comparison with fluids contained in the surrounding environment. It has been long known that certain types of fluids, when placed in a stable reference position (as by means of a fixed interior reference surface which is completely immersed in the fluid), can accurately indicate the presence of air or other gases in the fluid or surrounding environment which has come in contact with the fluid. This is true whether the fluid is a liquid or a vapor. In U.S. Pat. No. 3,230,632, there is disclosed a stabilizer apparatus for indicating the presence of air or other gas in a surrounding environment. This apparatus has a pair of opposed ultrasonic transducers which are immersed in an oil bath. The transducers are energized by the application of a predetermined frequency high voltage pulse signal to the transducers. When air or other gases are in the oil bath, ultrasonic energy is reflected back at the surface of the oil and at an interface between the oil and gases which is separate from the oil surface. The reflected energy changes the frequency at which the transducers operate and the energy is measured, so that when the predetermined frequency is reached, an alarm signal is given to indicate the presence of the gases or air. In the present invention there is provided a stabilizer apparatus which operates on a substantially different principle than that of the above-identified U.S. Patent. In the present invention, there are provided means for pumping a very large flow of oil into a secondary chamber of significantly larger volume than that of the primary chamber containing the ultrasonic energy. The flow of oil is conducted through a conduit where it is mixed with a very small volume of the surrounding environment. When there is the presence of air or other gases in the surrounding environment, it will enter the open end of the conduit and mix with the flowing oil. The oil which is pumped into the secondary chamber is of a density which is higher than the oil surrounding the apparatus, and any volume of gas which enters the oil will result in a relatively large variation in density between the flow of oil and the surrounding environment. When the high density oil and the surrounding medium have the same acoustic impedances, the oil will travel a longer path through the medium to reach a receiver than the gases and it will
