Q: Cygwin: Permissions: Can I add a user to a group/folder? Is it possible to add a user to a group/folder/file? I know this is possible with other operating systems, but can it be done with Cygwin? A: You can add a user to a group by running: cygrp --help A: You can add a user to a group via command line using chgrp, or addgroup, and remove it using delgroup, or dropgroup. You can view user's group using user, and if you want to add a user, run chgrp --help, if you want to add a group use addgroup --help. You can see groups a user belongs to using groups and findgroup. You can also view if a user is a member of a group using --format=%U, and list if a group is a member of another using --format=%G. A: Cygwin has recently added --adduser functionality that allows you to add a user to a given group. As can be seen from the help output, the command is similar to addgroup; however, this will add the user account to the current user's primary group.

Echinococcus granulosus: immunological responses in individuals with active infection. The frequency of Echinococcus granulosus hydatid cysts was studied in patients who had been investigated, treated and released on clinical or radiological grounds from hospitals in the north-west of England and in Scotland. Cysts were found in 21 per cent of all individuals who had been reviewed, diagnosed and treated. The potential for reinfection was small. Differences in host responses to infection with the different strains of E. granulosus cannot be demonstrated. This is the first reported case of a patient recovering from
