First on the election There's a First on the election in Singapore. We already know who are the candidates. Today, we find out which party has the highest number of seats in parliament. November 6 is the day when voters will decide, or rather make their choice. There will be a first on the election, and you can find out who has the most seats in parliament, the ruling People's Action Party (PAP). But there will also be a first for a certain politician, because he will become the first Singaporean to have lost two general elections, twice having lost to the PAP, and then going on to lose his deposit. How, you might ask, did John Tan lose his deposit twice? This is not something only for seasoned voters. For the voters who have barely survived the first on the election, and those who are still waking up as it is midday, here is a timeline of what the election is all about. 0800: Voting stations open Sukhothai Thammathiri Compound 0900: Polls closed Polls will close at 9pm. 0830: Voting stations close Polls will close at 9pm. 29 July: SDP sweeps more than half of S'pore's seats in Parliament An Andrew Yeo, PAP (photo).
