This season's World Cup will also mark the first time some aspects of the game will work with the new "Player Impact Visualisation Technology," which looks at the player's real-life movement to estimate how and where they will attack the ball, use the ball, combine with an opponent or lose the ball. "We've brought more than a thousand new elements to FIFA over the last 10 years," said executive producer Aleksander Holiga. "With FIFA 21 we want to explore the world of simulation football even further." Finally, the game will introduce The Coach Touch, which will give players an improved zoom function, different camera angles and new how-to-play videos. It will also include the new Rewind function and various technical additions to make the experience smoother, including body and ball and man marking. FIFA 22 will be available on Nov. 24 for PlayStation 4, Xbox One, Windows PC, Nintendo Switch and on mobile devices. View More News

N-acetylcysteine protects from the oxytoxic effects in the rat fetal lung. Oxygen toxicity results in decreased pulmonary function, impaired alveolar development and adverse effects on the developing brain. The cytoprotective agent N-acetylcysteine (NAC) has been shown to protect against some of the effects of oxygen toxicity in the adult and developing mammalian lung. We investigated whether a single dose of NAC given prior to and during oxygen exposure of rat fetuses decreased fetal pulmonary dysfunction as well as the incidence of cerebral abnormalities that resulted from exposure to 50% oxygen. Pregnant rats were pretreated with NAC or saline during gestational days 14-21. On gestational day 21, pregnant rats were exposed to 50% oxygen or room air for 6 h. At term, fetuses were examined for measures of lung and brain function. NAC decreased fetal pulmonary dysfunction in 50% oxygen exposed fetuses, as indicated by decreased decrements of arterial oxygen tension and right ventricular weight. Intranatal NAC decreased the incidence of cerebral ventricular enlargement and the incidence of fetal death in 50% oxygen exposed fetuses. These findings demonstrate that NAC provided protection against the adverse effects of high-dose oxygen on the rat fetal lung and brain.
