I am not talking about the tutorial for sending files from laptop to pc.I want to know how can i get response from the desktop app to the android phone. Is the android phone required to be running some app from the market to respond to the desktop app.? I need to do this for a university project and i have looked up on google but could not find anything relevant to my question. The problem i need to resolve is that i want my app to read weather conditions and display them on my iPhone. I have setup my server and am running the program on my pc. I have now need to find out how to get the response back from my iPhone to my pc. I need to get the response data back to my PC as i want to pass these data on to my Android app. This is a very very general question and i might not be clear in my description. I apologise about this as i am not a native english speaker. Any help would be appreciated. I would really appreciate it. Hi, Currently, the Bluetooth API doesn't support sending large amounts of data. That could change in the future. The Android API doesn't require any special app to be installed on the Android device for it to work. You just need to be connected to a Bluetooth device that responds to the information sent to it. If you want to send data to more than one Android device, you need to send the data to a connected device first, and then get the response data from the device you want to send it to.
