I have a problem installing windows 7 on my disk, because it has a couple of partitions on the disk, which are NTFS. I want to make a complete install of windows 7, how can I do that? A: I would suggest you do a Linux install first, then Windows, so you avoid this situation. You can then re-do the Windows install from the Linux install. We live in a game industry in which there are very few "true" original concepts. Games like ICO, Papers Please, Limbo, and Dark Souls break the mold by telling their stories in a unique way, and players have been embracing these concepts for years. A modern game, even with a basic story, can still have more in-depth content than its predecessors. Some of the big titles, like DayZ, constantly add new content to what was originally intended. Some smaller titles, like Inside, are entirely built around the concept. But what about concepts that don't get the widespread recognition or focus of the current market. What about concepts that get recognized, but not as a complete product. So that concept could then be added to later, as a sort of add-on. Some other examples are Hyper Light Drifter's New Game Plus and Metal Gear Solid V's Ground Zeroes. While these concepts are not sold as full products, they're still new to the market and can add a ton of new material to existing games and expand the definition of what makes a good game. One of the lesser known games to have a concept added to it was the RPG Final Fantasy XIII-2, which started out as Final Fantasy XIII with a new world map. The world map introduced Final Fantasy XIII-2's Monster of the Day system. When the world map was played a certain event would trigger, with multiple different outcomes. After this event had finished, a new randomly generated monster would be added to the world map. This event/monster was randomly generated the same way the previous random event was. This continued until the end of the game, when a clear final event was reached. This clear event would sometimes spawn a very powerful monster, if done right. When Final Fantasy XIII-2 came out, this was a pretty amazing new concept to the world of RPGs. But it wasn't just used as an event generator. A Monster of the Day event for the world map itself was included as well. This event/monster was randomly generated the same way the previous event/monster was. This continued until the end of the game, when a clear final event was reached. This clear event would sometimes spawn a very powerful monster, if done right. This gave the world map a new event/monster every time it was loaded, and it also gave the player a reason to make regular trips to it. This kind of concept that isn't built into the core game is starting to be

Nicolas de Gaubuisson This film was donated to us by Nicolas de Gaubuisson, who kindly got in touch with many of us and gave us a detailed description of the film. When we asked Nicolas what the film was about, he replied: "It shows two young women competing to get a cream cake from a dealer. Something goes wrong when they involve a pig. The two young women take refuge with a farmer but the pig find them and injures the farmer's right hand, and has to be put down. The young women are then about to get married and the only thing the farmer's wife needs is a cream cake to finish her cake decoration. But the two young women refuse to get theirs until she lends them her cream cakes. She is eventually forced to lend the two young women her cream cake to stop them being damaged. This is all very confusing but the film starts on the left where the women are both in the farmhouse reading the paper and the farmer leaves for the fields, and when he comes back the women are taking the cake from him as it finished. It then goes to a flashback where the pig is annoying the farmer who is trying to get his cows back to the house and sends him to get the cattle logs. When the farmer comes back he cuts the finger of his hand open and goes to apply the bandage to it, but gets a wrong adhesive paper and goes to apply it and gets it to the whole of the bandage sticking out, so he has to get it cut off so that he can get to the other hand. The hero of the film comes back with three shortbread cakes (in a little sweet tin one) and when he gives them to the farmer's wife the film goes to the factory where he works for the day. When he goes back the farmer's wife asks him to buy a cream cake for her and she tells him that she had a bad time at the shop the day before. He buys a cream cake but when he
