The prevalence and pattern of coronary artery disease (CAD) in Arabs is not well known. The aim of this study was to determine the prevalence of CAD in patients presenting to coronary care units (CCUs) with non-ST-segment elevation (NSTE) myocardial infarction (MI) and ST-segment elevation (STE) MI in Kuwait. In addition, information about risk factors and type of coronary intervention was also assessed. We included 268 patients consecutively admitted to CCU with NSTE-MI and STE-MI in a 3-month period. They were prospectively evaluated for risk factors, use of reperfusion treatment and CCU stay, and then followed up to 2 months. Clinical and ECG data were analysed for the classification of MI, ventricular arrhythmia, and different pattern of CAD. The results showed a significant difference between the admission time to the CCU of the two groups: 24 h vs. 72 h in STE-MI patients and 16 h vs. 72 h in NSTE-MI patients (P

"When men do it, it's rock 'n' roll, but when we do it, it's a football game," says Brasher. One need only look at the reaction in the stands to see how deeply the misogyny runs. In the women's game, the fans are generally mellow, and in some cases, quite helpful. For example, when some players are in trouble, they are generally pushed back into the stands, where they can be given a break from the game's stifling heat. "They just love the fans down there, they're just thrilled to be able to sit there and get their bags off," Skoglund says. One notable exception is the loyal group who follow the U.S. national team. "The fans are allowed to have beers and carry on, but [for] the most part, we have to stay in the stadium," says Stretching Coach Dow. In the men's game, the beer is long gone, the fans are raucous and, other than the occasional loss, the crowds are generally easy going. In Canada, the fans are equally loyal. Vancouver's BC Place is a symbol of the country's devotion to its soccer teams. The stadium is one of the most important venues in Canada, a full-time home to the country's national team and it's women's team.
