Strzok, who worked on the FBI's investigation into Hillary Clinton's email practices, began the text exchanges with an exclamation of "I love you so much" and ended with "I can't stop thinking about you," and "We will be together again. I can feel the sun on your back." And it's not just some new romantic/sexual attraction — Page ended text messages with Strzok and a female FBI attorney with a picture of a crying woman, acting out the "You're gonna get me fired, huh?" line from the hit comedy film Office Space. In March, the New York Times reported that the FBI and Justice Department had been concerned for months that Strzok and Page's text messaging was biased against Clinton. The pair were removed from the Clinton email investigation in August 2016. The texts made their way to Congress this month, and have been heavily covered in news reports. Strzok, in turn, sent at least one text to Page that could be read to mean he was planning to delete text messages regarding the Clinton investigation. In July, following an interview with the FBI, Page texted Strzok that "I need to reach out to you for some tough love at the moment." On Sunday, Page responded with a text that seemed to confirm the story that she and Strzok had both been removed from the Clinton probe, and that they had had a relationship outside of government. "I can't stop thinking about you," she told him, adding, "Go big or go home." Strzok responded, "God, I love you 6d1f23a050
