Something like this: let children = this.props.children let childrenList = children.map(child => { return { child: child, root: this.props.root } }) For this I would have to get the list of all component's with children. Is there a way to get that directly? So I can either just use [] as property or does it have to be written to a component so that I can check if it has components for each child property? A: As I answered in the comments, the correct way to do this is to use React.addons.update to update the root component's children prop. let children = this.props.children let childrenList = children.map(child => { return { child: child, root: this.props.root } }) React.addons.update(this.props.children, { children: childrenList }); Diplomatic sources say that the agreement on the transfer of the NATO airbase is likely to be signed in the near future. The planes of the alliance and the Ukrainian Air Force will be based in 6d1f23a050
